BIOGRAPHICAL NOTE

The Sargent family came to New Haven in 1864 when Joseph Bradford Sargent (1822-1907) along with his brothers George and Edward established their hardware manufacturing plant on Water, Wallace, and Hamilton Streets. Sargent and Company has been a leading factor in the economic life of New Haven since that time.

Joseph fathered twelve children. As of 1950 there were thirty grandchildren and fifty-two great-grandchildren. Zeigler Sargent (1881-1955) was a grandson of Joseph Bradford Sargent. His father was Henry Bradford Sargent (1851-1927) and his mother Harriet Oaks Sargent (1854-1942). Henry was also active in the business and became a member of the Yale Corporation.

Zeigler Sargent began to research his family background as a teenager, before 1899 when he entered Yale. During the ensuing forty years he limited his genealogical research and devoted much of his time to Sargent and Company. Then from 1943 to 1955 he and his wife, Agnes, published a family newsheet, "Sargentrivia," as a means of keeping the family members in touch with each other. "Sargentrivia" gave current family news and contained articles of historical and genealogical interest.

Zeigler was vice-president and treasurer of Sargent and Company until he retired in 1951. He then attended Yale Graduate School, where he received his M.A. degree in American history in 1953. At his death he was writing a history of Sargent and Company.

Aaron Sargent (1822-1913) of Somerville, Massachusetts, was born in Charleston, Massachusetts. Until 1872 he was associated with Nathaniel Winsor & Company, Boston. He compiled the 1895 edition of Sargent Genealogy.

John Sargent of Chicago, Illinois, was born in Leicester, Massachusetts, 1839. He worked for the Michigan Central Railroad before going into private business. He co-authored Sargent Genealogy with Aaron Sargent.

Bibliography

Sargent, Aaron and John Sargent, Sargent Genealogy, Somerville, Mass., 1895.

The Sargent family has researched its background extensively. It traces its roots back to its English ancestry. Several members have published books about its genealogy; others have been responsible for informal family publications. Zeigler Sargent collected much of the material and notes used by his predecessors and gave them, along with his own notes and papers, to the New Haven Colony Historical Society.

The collection consists of four file boxes and two oversize envelopes. It has been divided into three major sections: Genealogical and Historical Papers (one-half of the collections), Personal Papers, and Photographs.

Generally the arrangement of the collection is alphabetical. The number of items in each folder is indicated in parenthesis following the folder's title.

The Genealogical and Historical section is made up chiefly of the letters, biographical sketches, charts, research notes, and documents used by Aaron, John, Winthrop, and Zeigler Sargent to prepare their publications. In the first box the material has been arranged by these authors and a few miscellaneous correspondents. The second box holds genealogical charts and material arranged by other family lines: Collier, Collins, Gibbs, Hotchkiss, Jones, Lewis, Miles, Murray, Norton, Oaks, Peck, and Purinton.

The Personal Papers come from several family branches and include miscellaneous letters, legal documents, newspaper clippings, an apprenticeship paper from Sargent and Company, a travel log (actually copies of letters) written by Hattie A. Oaks in 1877 during a trip to Europe, and many other assorted family mementos.

The photographs, many of them gifts from Mrs. Toy Tilney, are not all identified. Those that are show the Sargent, Oaks, and Tilney families. Several older pictures of Leicester, Massachusetts, and New Haven are also in the collection.

The earliest document is a letter written to Daniel Denny by his mother, Grace Denny, in 1734. The collection essentially ends at 1955 with the death of Zeigler Sargent, although a few photographs and one publication postdate that event.

For a more detailed breakdown of the collection, see the Table of Contents.
