Biographical Note:

Since about sixty percent of this collection consists of the papers of the New Haven Grays, the popular name for a military unit whose various official designations follow on a separate sheet, a brief biography of them follows:

During the last portion of the 18th and the first portion of the 19th centuries, it was not unusual for local companies of militia to be formed under the leadership of a prominent young citizen. These companies often had overtones of elitism. Membership was by invitation, and was highly prized. Officers were elected; uniforms and equipment were a personal expense, the state merely supplying guns and ammunition. Drills were supplemented by social affairs, and a man of education and background was perfectly happy to serve as a private in what was sometimes virtually a private club. But the weekly drills were taken seriously, the affairs of the companies conducted earnestly, and their members never lacked for courage.

The New Haven Grays was such a company. It was called into being by Sophos Staples (1789-1826), a young New Haven attorney, and was formally organized on September 13, 1816. Thomas G. Woodward was First Lieutenant and Samuel Hitchcock, Ensign. After a winter of drill in Mix Assembly Hall and elsewhere, it held its first public review on May 5, 1817, on Hillhouse Avenue, then virtually an open field. Originally the company was known as the New Haven Light Infantry, but it soon became known as the New Haven Grays because of the color of its uniforms.

The New Haven Grays was Guard of Honor for President Monroe, General Lafayette and President Jackson during their visits to New Haven. It performed other tasks, too, once helping contain a town-gown riot. Several times the Grays was at odds with the state government, but each time the problem was eventually resolved. In 1828 a dissident group of Grays resigned and formed the New Haven (National) Blues.

There is no record of the New Haven Grays having served in the Mexican War as a unit. News of the bombardment of Ft Sumter came to New Haven a few hours before the company met for drill, and the members' offer of service to the federal government was immediate. The New Haven Grays fought at Bull Run as Company C, 2nd Regiment, Connecticut Volunteers. At the end of its 90-day enlistment, it returned to New Haven. Many of its members then resigned and joined other units, particularly companies of the 7th, 15th, and 27th Regiments. A number of Grays in the latter Regiment saw action at Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville and Gettysburg. Older members formed themselves into the Veteran Grays, and the remaining younger members who had not resigned, into an Independent Grays unit. In 1863 the latter volunteered for active service and was called to duty with the Connecticut militia as Company F, 2nd Regiment, Connecticut Volunteers, but was not sent to the front. Twenty-three Grays lost their lives in the Civil War.

In 1876 the New Haven Grays was a part of the Guard of Honor at the opening of the Centennial Exhibition in Philadelphia.

Each summer after the Civil War the New Haven Grays integrated itself as F Company, 2nd Regiment, into the Connecticut National Guard for a two-week training encampment, usually at Niantic. It was not called up for the Spanish-American War, but played an active role as a unit in the Mexican border foray of 1916.

In World War I the New Haven Grays became Company F, 102nd Infantry Regiment of the 26th (Yankee) Division and fought in a number of key battles with distinction. Sixteen members of Company F lost their lives.

The available historical records of the Grays for the period 1919-1941 indicate that the Grays continued on as an active organization after WW I. In WW II The New Haven Grays was mobilized as Company C, 1st Battalion, 102nd Infantry Regiment, 43rd Division, and served with distinction in the Pacific Theatre of the war.

After WW II what had been the New Haven Grays emerged as Company A, 1st Battalion, 102nd Infantry Regiment, Connecticut National Guard, headquartered in New Haven. But there was little interest among the young men of the city in trying to reshape Company A into the elite WASP organization it once had been. It is unlikely that the National Guard would have supported any such efforts. Company A, heir to the New Haven Grays' name, recruits like any other American military unit, without regard to race, creed or color. Membership in a military unit by invitation is not in keeping with the times. In 1946, then, 130 years of New Haven Grays tradition became history.

Fragmentary papers of other military units comprised of New Haven and units from a handful of surrounding towns are included here. Chief of these is the New Haven Blues, and the Conn. United States Naval Militia, and lists of area men serving in World War I and veterans buried in area cemeteries.

Finally, this collection has become a repository for random gifts of local military papers, some as few as a single sheet, but all of historical interest and some of significance and emotional depth.

Analysis:

Since the bulk of the collection concerns the NHG, it is placed first, in Boxes 1-15a, with a later addition for 1940-46 in Boxes 19-21.

Next follow papers of small, specific units; then a chronological order centered about a single topic where possible, such as commissions and finances and newspaper accounts of military events, and lastly, a listing of veterans of all wars buried in New Haven and nearby town cemeteries.
